DeepaMehta is a knowledge worker's software platform. The goal of this project is to implement an easy-to-use, powerful, and feature-rich environment for knowledge workers. The main window is divided in different areas, each related to a single content type (text, images, documents, etc.) The main window features a contents pane for editing and managing content (text, links, images, documents, etc.), a navigation pane for browsing the contents stored in DeepaMehta, a content-specific pane for displaying content of a specific type, and a viewer pane for viewing the contents stored in DeepaMehta. The main window features a toolbar for system-level functions, i.e., for managing DeepaMehta and its content, e.g., sorting of content, navigation through DeepaMehta, or changing the content of DeepaMehta. The main window features a status area. The status area shows the total number of items in DeepaMehta, their location, the total number of links and the number of open documents. It also shows the current content type. The main window features a footer area containing options for actions to be performed in DeepaMehta or other programs, e.g., opening a new document. A close button closes the main window and exits DeepaMehta. The two hotkeys Ctrl+Escape and Ctrl+F1 enable DeepaMehta to be exited by the user. The main window also features three panels that show lists of various content types. Current content types are defined by their content type labels. They can be changed in the "Settings" menu. DeepaMehta is based on a combination of the following technologies: wxWidgets, the NeWS toolkit, is used to implement the GUI and to run the DeepaMehta window. Python, a programming language, is used to develop DeepaMehta. The NeWS toolkit implements an object-oriented user interface and manages all the internal data.
