The Security Council passed resolution 2178, which was drafted by British, French and German permanent members with the support of the European Union, on Friday after a year of negotiations on the text, said

UN spokesman Martin Nesirky. "The Security Council has created a new dedicated team in the UN Secretariat to keep an eye on the internet," he said. "It will be named the Office of the Special Adviser on the Prevention of the Misuse of the Internet for Terrorist Purposes." The Security Council, which is chaired by Britain, adopted the resolution with a secret ballot on Friday after many of the delegations that are parties to the resolution - which prohibits terrorist use of the internet and social media - expressed reservations over its drafting. Mr Nesirky said the new office would be headed by a new UN civil servant, and would "advance prevention of all forms of terrorist use of the internet, including the promotion of online recruitment and radicalisation, and the financing of such use." The office will consist of a group of experts and will operate with a budget of US$4.5 million over three years. But the idea of an office will not satisfy rights groups who say that existing bodies already on the ground are operating with an insufficient budget or more staff. "UN internet freedom bodies already exist but with no budget of more than US$50,000 each a year, they do not have the resources to do their jobs properly," said the International Telecommunication Union's (ITU) director general Henrietta Fore. 570a42141b
