A good correlation between the production of inflammatory cytokines by glioma-infiltrating T cells and the progression of the disease suggests that cytokine production may be involved in the pathogenesis of the brain tumor. This article summarizes the relevant literature to address the following questions: (1) Are glioma patients particularly prone to produce cytokines and what is the range of cytokines in serum and cerebrospinal fluid of glioma patients compared with serum and cerebrospinal fluid of healthy controls? (2) Which factors regulate the production of cytokines in glioma patients and what implications do they have for the efficacy of immunotherapy? In vitro data suggest that interferon-gamma is produced by brain tumor cells, and tumor-infiltrating T cells could be responsible for the production of additional cytokines. Interleukin (IL)-12 and IL-2 are crucial for the cytotoxic T-lymphocyte response, whereas IL-4 promotes the formation of Th2 cells and IL-10 suppresses the antitumor activity of CD8+ T cells. Glioma-infiltrating T cells produce both Th1 and Th2 cytokines, but the majority of cells produce only Th2 cytokines. This suggests that immunotherapy with cytokines, in particular IL-2, in combination with other agents, such as monoclonal antibodies, will improve the efficacy of immunotherapy.
