The application HDDDISK_SORVER is designed to fix problems in a computer's hard disk. It is created to help you scan and locate the damaged sectors in your hard disk. The software is provided with an advanced setting, which allows you to define the start and end points on the disk. This means you can determine the exact location of damaged sectors, allocating a maximum of 1.5GB to 2GB of disk space. The process is not a simple one and it needs much time, but the benefits of having the hard disk repaired are really worth the effort. For some reason, some sectors on the hard disk are filled with random data. When this happens, the sector is marked with a red mark. How to use the tool: Start the application. The program will display a list of options, such as the main window with the quick view. Select the "Scan and Fix" option from the list. The program will start scanning your hard disk and fixing damaged sectors. Now you can select the "Fix" option from the list. All damaged sectors will be displayed on the list. You can highlight the ones you want to use to restore the data to a new hard disk. The program will start fixing the selected bad sectors and will require your attention for several minutes. The time depends on the size of the hard disk and the number of sectors that need to be fixed. Now you will be able to use the "Restore" option. Choose the hard disk that you want to use for the repair, define the size of the disk and select the sectors that need to be restored. That's it! You can find out more info on the developer's website. A: The PC Inspector by Ultimate Software is one such utility. It will tell you if you have bad sectors, and if you do, it can repair them. You might have to seek out a specialty disk tool to do that, but the PC Inspector will work with any type of drive that you have. A: Hitman Pro is also worth looking at.
