Retarded individual evidence, cognitive deficits, and clinical features in childhood-onset schizophrenia: a longitudinal clinical and neuropsychological investigation. This study presents data concerning the clinical and neuropsychological features of a group of children and adolescents who were subsequently diagnosed as suffering from schizophrenia. The period of observation is 11.5 years, the longest follow-up interval in child psychiatry. Thirty-nine children and adolescents, who were first assessed in 1979, have been followed-up for a total of 13 years. The diagnoses of schizophrenia, schizophrenia-like disorders and schizoaffective disorders, made independently by a panel of neuropsychiatrists and psychologists, were supported by extensive clinical and neuropsychological data, including the results of the Present State Examination and the Brief Psychiatric Rating Scale. Some of the patients, though referred to as retarded, made significant progress in the years following their initial assessment. Sixteen patients showed such a pattern. Delayed neuromotor development and language impairment were common. All patients showed slight impairment on the Block Design subtest of the WISC, while no specific impairment was found on the Picture Completion or the Vocabulary subtests. Nonetheless, the scores on these subtests were in a normal range. None of the patients achieved the age-corrected standard score on one of the Gc IQ subtests. Some of the patients were diagnosed during the years of study; of the remainder, 15 were identified within a year after referral. Only one of the 17 patients with a definitive diagnosis of schizophrenia had been diagnosed by the time of the follow-up assessment. In the group with schizoaffective and schizophrenia-like disorders, three patients were never officially diagnosed with schizophrenia; one of them developed a symptomatically similar condition in adulthood., the frequency of metabolic syndrome components was greater among women in the highest tertile of biomarker levels compared to those in the middle and lowest tertiles (in the order of *p* for trend \

Q: How to serve Static content in Express/Nodejs I want to serve static content in Express. The problem is Express doesn't have a built-in solution to serve static content. I had been using Connect middleware. app.use(express.static('public')) I had no experience with NPM as well as Express before. My repository contains ~500+ folders. Is there any better way to serve static content with Express than using Connect middleware. A: Express has middleware like this, you can use it to redirect requests to static files. app.use(express.static('public', { root: __dirname + '/public' })); /* * Copyright © 2009 Chris Wilson * * Permission to use, copy, modify, distribute, and sell this software * and its documentation for any purpose is hereby granted without * fee, provided that the above copyright notice appear in all copies * and that both that copyright notice and this permission notice * appear in supporting documentation, and that the name of * Chris Wilson not be used in advertising or publicity pertaining to * distribution of the software without specific, written prior * permission.
