The Asynchronous Online Experience.
Explore a Huge World

The game's procedural map system and its usage brings you an open world experience

Basically, it is like an adventure map. A spirit is generated on the map, and at the spot of the spirit, the battle takes place.
The spirit can travel freely depending on the circumstances while it fight for one week. With the time passing, the spirit'll evolves while collecting EXP and drops of artifacts. After that, it can be transferred to another world by the kind of of magic. The place where the level cannot be entered is based on a special spell, so you will have a new experience in that area of the maps! The special world maps are made with exception of the passage of levels.

The world map can be generated uniformly.

A piece of important information: The world map will be generated randomly. In addition, the same level will be generated even if it is transferred.

- A large area (Battle Map)
- 1 Dungeon (Zone map)
- 2 Quests(Exploration Map)
- 2 Large dungeons (Zone Map)
- 2 Special maps (Exploration Map)
- 1 Each background map (each map is a different world map)
- 2 Large world maps (battle map)

The battle map, the middle map of the four maps (battle map, zone map, exploration map, and dungeon map). The number of party members may be under or over 9.

The battle map has a miniature battlefield with the most powerful units on it.

If the window is wider than 1024px, it should shrink to 500px. If the window is smaller, it should grow to 768px. All of the CSS on the whole page has been set to relative and everything resizes as it should. The problem is in my design - when the window size is wider than 1024px, I can't seem to be able to get my checkbox and buttons to function properly. They either don't get reset when I resize the window back to 500px, or they jump to someplace where they shouldn't be. I'm using Bootstrap, and am using the relative widths on the checkbox and buttons to make them scale with the window, but it seems that the buttons don't have a reset set. Here is the HTML code:
