1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to optical devices, such as optical shutters having an electrically controlled optical area.

2. Description of the Related Art Optical shutters are used to turn on and off transmitted light in applications such as cameras or in infrared thermal imaging systems. Conventional optical shutters have a mechanically moveable element, such as a movable transparent panel, and an actuator, such as a motor, to move the element and open and close the optical device. These components add cost to the device, enlarge the package size for the device, and decrease the amount of mechanical reliability needed for the device. There is a need in the art for optical shutter devices which do not require an actuator or motor, and which do not require movable mechanical elements.
