Free download 3gp videos, movies, tv shows. The Persian Empire in the Middle Ages (ca 651-1501), is the official history of the Iranian Empire, based on the Qanun-e-Akhlaq of the 14th century. The first part contains three volumes and the second part the four volumes. The first part of the Qanun-e-Akhlaq was written in 1312 by Ismaili scholars who had been appointed by the Ilkhanid ruler Abu Bakr and later by Ibrahim (the Sa'diye). The second part of the Qanun-e-Akhlaq was written by a Jamshid (Jamshid ibn Ali-Kazvini) in 1385. This work was elaborated and reworked by Nezami (Nizam al-Mulk) in his Arda-nameh (Book of Lights) for the Bahr al-Ramm (Sea of The Gazelle) and other works that are also considered the official history of the Ilkhanate. This book was also considered "official" history by the contemporary Iranian historians in Iran until the Qanun-e-Akhlaq was written by the Hamadani brothers. Then the Qanun-e-Akhlaq was accepted as the official history of the dynasty. That is why many historians consider that Qanun-e-Akhlaq is the official history of the dynasty, though other historians believe that as the first part of the Qanun-e-Akhlaq was based on the Persian sources, it should be the official history of the dynasty. Also the Qanun-e-Akhlaq mentions a number of locations and events not mentioned in the official histories of the various Iranian medieval periods; such as the Iranian record of the Hamdanid in Transoxiana that seems to occur before Ghiyath al-Din Kay Khosrow II. Most of these historiographies have adopted the research of the Qanun-e-Akhlaq. Nevertheless, some of the customs and traditions described in the Qanun-e-Akhlaq, e.g. the important role of hunting for the ruling elite, and what is written in the Qanun-e-Akhlaq is not mentioned in the official histories. Moreover, the customs and traditions described in this book have been preserved more than others in the Iranian
