Unlike Photoshop, it is not a raster image editor. It is a complete vector graphic editing program. POWERPAINT is also available as a stand-alone version. The stand-alone version runs about $50, while the more advanced version including all the same tools is priced at $300. Check out www.adobe.com/products/powerpaint.html.en for more information. When you learn to work with PDF files, you can apply this approach to other areas of design and digital media production as well. Photoshop and Illustrator are two of the most common raster-based editors and both provide the ability to create and manipulate images. Raster-based editors generate images from an electronic format, such as a pixelated bitmap. In the production of a raster image, the photos are photographed, scanned, or imported digitally from a digital camera or image scanner. Illustrator and Photoshop are both raster-based programs and therefore generate images in the same way: pixels. When you create your documents in a raster-based editor, the images are pixelated bitmaps that cannot be altered with any vector graphics without them becoming pixelated and losing their detail. So what's the difference between a raster and a vector image? The answer lies in the difference between a pixel and a vector. The pixels in a raster-based image are arranged like a grid or mathematically constructed. Vector-based images are a series of mathematical equations of lines, curves, and shapes, which are created, stored, and used to create and change an image. A pixel is the smallest unit that is used to display an image on a computer monitor. In Photoshop and Illustrator, images

Overnight heejays have been uncharacteristically quiet, making it seem as though all the busiest people on the planet are going home or putting their feet up. But one way or another, they've finished preparing for the night shift and the beginning of the new day. The sun is setting, and for the next few hours, we're going to be consuming all the coffee we can handle. Electric Jukebox To be honest, we don't really need to be reminded. But the AMC Theater in downtown St. Paul has added more variety to the entertainment experience than any other mall we've been to before. Its four movie-theater screens are painted in bright, eye-catching colors, and its programming is focused on telling a story. Maybe you want to watch the magical realism film Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon. Or the adventure film Pirates of the Caribbean. Or the drama The Help. The films are projected onto a screen in the center of the theater, while sound comes from speakers on the walls. Once the movie is complete, it's time for part two. Here's how it works: Once the movie's over, customers can ask for a seat next to the speakers, and in their seat, some of them start jamming out. Using smartphone apps, the movie screen then becomes a dance floor for the audience. Like I said, this part of the AMC Theater is on the cutting edge of movie theater sound. Mood Lighting At the corner of 10th and Kellogg avenues in downtown, large planters lead to a grassy yard that holds trees and a flagpole. Painted the night before, the trees are decorated with lanterns. At 8 p.m., they started lighting up, and the whole scene looked like a magical scene from the film The Nightmare Before Christmas. You can tell it's Halloween because it's the season of pumpkins, ghosts and witches. In the past, St. Paul has celebrated Halloween with live music. But this year the music came via the sounds of wind chimes and a DJ. Safety First A staple of any Halloween celebration is a parade and floats. This year the safety-conscious crowd would not be disappointed. First up was the College of St. Scholastica in Duluth, Minn. The College of St. Scholastica is one of the

Q: How to render the first and last rows in an infowindow, in Google Maps API v3? Using Google Maps API v3, in an InfoWindow (standard Google example) I want to get the first and last row from a call to `getMarkers` in the `renderInfoWindow` function (which I believe is only the last one), I've tried loading a hidden map in the first function and adding it to the markers object so it is rendered in the InfoWindow, but am having trouble finding a way to get the columns of that map outside of the `renderInfoWindow` function. Any ideas how?

function initialize() { var map = new google.maps.Map(document.getElementById("map_canvas"), myOptions); // create a marker var marker = new google.maps.Marker({ position: me, map: map, icon: '../icons/marker.png' }); // create a custom InfoWindow var content = " + 'Hello' + 'You are at: lat=' + lat + 'lng=' + lng + " + 'Contact:' + contact + " + 'Price:' + price + " + 'View more' +
