Note If you want to create a title screen for your video, title it something like _Table of Contents_. Put it above or below the video and it looks really cool. # What Is Keynote? Keynote is a software application for Apple Macs that can be used for creating slide presentations and creating and editing documents. It can be bought and downloaded as a .app on the Apple App Store. Keynote is similar in functionality to PowerPoint and features numerous effects, animations, transitions, and layouts. Additionally, Keynote allows you to incorporate elements of Apple's iLife suite, which includes iPhoto, iMovie, and iDVD. The professional templates are designed to get you up and running quickly, but you have to license a template to use it. Most of the general templates are free. * Online tutorial: www.thumbtack.com/keynote-tutorial * Lynda tutorial: www.lynda.com/Keynote-tutorials-tutorials

Q: MySQL DB Schema - Columns for Variables I am building a PHP, MySQL application which has a user/login system. The main table has fields for the username and password. I want to include a field with the running 'number of login attempts' and another field with the day the user was last successful. So it is the same table, but some columns are changeable. The table is created once every x minutes from a function which runs daily (so no table-rebuild needed). The format of the variables in the table are as follows; $attempts=0; $last_successful=date("Y-m-d",$unix_time_stamp); So there are a total of three variables which are included in the table. Would it be easier to add the variables and define a separate table? I can't think of any advantages or disadvantages of this method. Thanks in advance! A: I'd recommend having one table with all your login information. You can then set your variables as values in the table (such as 0 to 1, where 1 is a failed login attempt, and set the corresponding column to NULL for successful logins.) I suggest that there is a column in your table for future use to make logging off easier. Example: logins table (note: this is just an example of the schema, not a complete database): id username password date_last_login attempts day_last_login days_last_login logout_log variables table: id value 1 0 2 1 3 1 4 NULL logins table is a table for all your login credentials. Variables (id,value) allows you to change the variables (id,value) daily or periodically. logins table will have columns for every field you want to change. When using an interactive program, you can use an IF statement to see if the user has a certain password, or simply check to see if they are logged in (using the date_last_login or the number of login attempts in your user table). The day_last_login column allows you to track your users'

Note The Brush Options dialog box gives you more control over your brushes. In this chapter, you'll learn about the different types of brushes, how to change the size, shape, and color of your brushes, how to create new brushes, how to edit existing brush presets, how to rename a brush, and how to choose which brush behaves like a mouse. # Using the Brush Tool The Brush tool allows you to apply brush effects to an image. When you create a brush, you can also set the brush options, including how the brush spreads or how much pressure is required to activate the brush. To make all these changes, you open the Brush Preset Options dialog box.
