Videos Photos U.S. federal officials said Monday that details of the shooting of five people at a Planned Parenthood clinic in Colorado have heightened concerns about the group's security practices, as investigators continue to pore over the shooting's details. Investigators who have flown in from across the country to help find out why a gunman opened fire on October 27 at a Colorado Planned Parenthood clinic are wrapping up their five-day field trip in the Denver area and are expected to leave Monday. In an interview with ABC, Javad Fakharzadeh, a member of Planned Parenthood security, detailed how the shooter left a threatening voicemail message before he opened fire. The shooting remains under investigation, but John McDonald, director of the Department of Justice's Criminal Division, said federal officials are growing increasingly concerned over information they have received about the group's security. "I think that the concern and the concern is growing right now over the security protocols that are being followed by Planned Parenthood for their employees, the security protocols that they have in place, that they execute, and what their policies and training requirements are," he said. Meanwhile, the suspect in the shooting has not been identified, and officials from the US Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives (ATF) said they are still looking into the matter. “This is an ongoing investigation and we are still in the preliminary stages of this,” said Richard Kolko, special agent in charge of the FBI in Denver. Kolko said that investigators have issued search warrants to look at security video and will look into whether there were more than the four weapons that were found at the scene. “There were four weapons found in the vehicle that the alleged perpetrator arrived in at the time of the incident,” he said. “We don’t know for sure whether there were any other weapons in the vehicle, so we don’t know whether he had more than that. We will see what we can find out in the next couple of days.” However, he said investigators are looking into whether there are any similar “tying incidents” at other Planned Parenthood clinics, and whether that may be contributing to the lack of security. “As we say in our press releases, this is one investigation, so at this point it’s too early to say
