This is an update for my spritely theme, SpritesReloaded. Previously I did a theme update and improved the look and feel a lot. But I can not just leave it like that. So I added several small things and changes to the theme. Now it looks like this: There's also the possibility to change the theme in the settings: - If you are interested in the complete theme you can find it here: - If you want to keep your theme you have to delete the line from the your /data/data/com.jellyscript.spritely/files/typemaps.xml I just sent a new Update for my Theme which is now a "Pink" version. I have also added a animated rain effect. I added an effect for the weather of the timeline on this animation. You can choose from 6 different climate types from the weather, Rock, Sea or Desert. Due to an update in the source code I can't update my theme and then submit the "Pink" theme to the Google Play Store. Thus I have decided to upload the theme and then delete the new files. But I had the idea to add a Cloud (Particle) effect. So I changed the "Particle effect" in the typemaps.xml file and uploaded a new version. But now I can only remove the effect before the update or break the theme. Due to an update in the source code I can't update my theme and then submit the "Pink" theme to the Google Play Store. Free Sprite Resources To Make Some Awesome and Marketable Sprites For Your Website What is a Sprite? A Sprite is the most common image extension in the Internet realm, that is, a web page consists of many, many small images, or Sprites, that when linked and layered together, are all able to work and act as one single image. Sprites greatly enhance site loading performance, and thus, most web pages use a number of them in order to make the site load faster. Why Use Sprites Instead Of One Huge Image? Both the web browsers and the internet servers are not able to handle very large graphics files. As such, web designers have found this way of creating pages more useful. Each Sprite uses only the graphics that fit in its own size, and as such, the web server can handle the file quite easily. The more Sprites you add, the faster the page will load. This is because the more images you add, the smaller the files that the web server has to load and process. Moreover, a client will only have to download a certain portion of the file, as opposed to a very large graphic file. Creating a Sprite Creating a Sprite file is as simple as dragging the element you wish to be part of the website in the area provided. Your next step will be to style the elements
