We are on the last 2 days before the deadline, but don't let that daunt you. You have until Tuesday to submit your entry! Posted to Cubivore.com site. Hi! This tutorial is about drawing a fantastic composition with cubes. You could use the same concept for drawing different kinds of objects. This is an example of my game, I would like to submit it to the online contest. I want to "Play the Jam", please let me know when you play and rate. Your feedback is important for me. Some features of the game are: - You control the little cube flying through the cube world where you can meet other cubes that can help you or harm you. - Each cube has different abilities – fireballs, light sources, evil cubes etc. - The goal of the game is to explore the cube world and finally you can find a cube with a special ability. - The action game has a realist look. Hi and welcome to "Cubivore". This is how I design a game. I start with the character model with different poses for every camera angle. The character could have a unique look, like Vampire: D Kind's character, he could be a prince in the Middle ages, the futuristic version of the knight etc. The game should not be just a platform, but an RPG with RPG elements like you find in Mario. The entire environment should not look like a Mario game, it should look like a game where the player can move through the different rooms to face different characters or enemies or other puzzles. There are different objects that you can discover: fireballs, bushes, springs, big chasms, puzzle. The player has to look for some of these objects to overcome the obstacles or to

Boggart The queen of the flies is a puzzle game for smartphone. Get iam the fly on your iPhone / iPad / iPod Touch But it's not about jumping, you know. But jumping isn't all that well... Most of all we wanted to bring's doll to the next level, and the end result is now, you nice to know! There are multiple layers of information in each level, which are marked by different colors. A golden circle indicates the goal, so you want to get out of that level as soon as possible. Give a hint to the queen to get you there faster! To clarify with the Boggart: We actually didn't see (well, plan it) a queen of the flies end game. We just went with the existing puzzle game, and we think that this makes it a little more straight forward! We hoped however to promote great gameplay, a playful puzzle, giving it somewhat a movie feeling - and we plan to work on that. We use a song as a way of sounding "acoustic" (with some vocals) and also trying to adapt to the way the game sounds. It will be the main "poser" or track over the whole game of the level. It has vocals. Another one which sounds a lot clearer than the first. It is more complex with a lot of information to read, so it needs to be told intuitive. Some of the information is not visible (in the middle), but we found this way better to convey the information. We think that it is a little harder as it has a mix of different vocal styles. A third one which gives a good feel of the music and is very enjoyable. Although the game is very short we think it does not get boring. Background At the beginning there is no music, you should see what we mean, no music later. We almost have one all the time, when it works :D We can add the music from the song as a new one. We first wanted to use a "melody" to use with two voices, but a melody lacks in expression. So we used vocals and created a song. The song works with more or less the same concept as many rock songs and has a classical side. We tried to

In the late 9th century CE, a humanoid robot called a mecha was developed in an ongoing effort to sustain the capacity of humans to wage war. The outcome was a bronze lifeform on two legs named the Iron Golem, which spread rapidly through the feudal states of the time. The Iron Golem were easily manipulated into combat and useful, but when the Iron Gods began to show increasing interest in the artificial war tools of the humans, the Iron Golem became a liability for any who would play at the human game. However, their greatest weakness was the fact that Iron Golems were built only of bronze, which made them prone to corrosion under the influence of water. At the same time, the Iron Gods began to expand their influence to other technologies, and the Iron Golem, the only surviving model, continued to suffer further decay as the various Iron Gods grew in strength and numbers. By 1039, the Iron Golem had deteriorated into a pitiful, ill-balanced and inefficient tool for warfare and was left in the ruins of an abandoned palace where it had once entertained the Iron Gods with its promise of power. Only the towns of Torch and Wrothrock, which had stumbled upon the increasingly dangerous machine, were aware of its existence. The local lords of Torch knew of this robot but found that it was too dangerous to take any direct action against it. As the Iron Gods looked to expand their influence, the human kingdoms feared the machinations that might result and shielded their technological resources. The local lords of Torch, who'd begun to see what the Iron Gods might truly be capable of, were determined to take a more direct approach in removing the danger posed by the Iron Golem. Their attempts to locate the Iron Golem would take them into the hazardous ruins of the abandoned palace of the former Iron God. Where they would find the Iron Golem was anybody's guess. EXCERPT Ruins, All around and below them, the carved walls of the ruined palace seemed to suck up all the light, becoming a vast shadow void filled with whispers. They shuffled amongst the tall ruined columns in the black light, aware of the presence of others, some of them dark, others glowing with clear light. The ruins were beginning to close in on the team with an ominous quiet; the soul of the place was whispering to them even as the dusk's shadows closed around them. Above them, a small clutch of lights descended to the ruins and made for the center of the earth like a group of birds descending into a strange nest. The
