Take part in the lively discussion here: of hyperlipidemia and oxidant damage in an animal model of human familial combined hyperlipidemia: effects of atorvastatin and pravastatin. Treatment of model rats that have been genetically selected to develop hyperlipidemia with atorvastatin decreases serum total cholesterol (TC), low-density lipoprotein (LDL) cholesterol (LDL-C) and triglyceride (TG) levels and elevates serum high-density lipoprotein (HDL) cholesterol levels. Pravastatin exerts similar effects in rats that do not express familial combined hyperlipidemia (FCHL). To determine whether statins influence oxidative stress in the same manner as FCHL, rats that have been selected to develop severe hyperlipidemia were treated with pravastatin (10 mg/kg) or atorvastatin (3
