He studied physics at Ludwig-Maximilians University in Munich and at Georg-August-Universität in Göttingen. In 2001, he received a PhD in physics from the University of Sussex in the United Kingdom. He then moved to Australia and worked at the University of Adelaide and at the Australian National University. He then started working at the Laboratoire de l'Accélérateur Linéaire in Mont-Moritz, Switzerland, which is a research laboratory for particle accelerators. In 1995, he joined the French Laboratoire de l'Accélérateur Linéaire, where he worked for the following 12 years on a project called "TAP". He was also a PhD student of the Laboratoire de Physique Subatomique and of the Université de Marseille, and a visiting researcher at the Laboratoire de Physique Subatomique and at the University of California at Irvine. He has published more than 20 papers in physics. He has worked at the SPS accelerator at CERN, which allowed him to conduct research at very high energy. He was one of the developers of the FASER experiment, which measures the production of particles at energies that are only accessible at CERN. In 2013, Ganaía moved to the Laboratoire de l'Accélérateur Linéaire at École Polytechnique in Palaiseau (France) where he continues to work on the TAP project. Scientific interests Ganaía is interested in how strong interactions generate the forces that keep galaxies together. He mainly works on the mechanisms that break a proton into a neutron or a quark. He has published more than 20 papers in physics, and he is currently working on the search for new particles that may exist at higher energy than the ones already known. Some of his recent work was motivated by the development of new accelerators that are becoming increasingly powerful. He developed new algorithms to extract information from the data generated by these accelerators

The antimicrobial activity of a number of biologically active peptides with various hydrophobicity and positively charged amino acids (Lys, Arg, Lys-Lys-Arg) used in the presence and absence of liposomes was examined against 22 strains of Staphylococcus aureus and 13 strains of S. epidermidis. Liposomes (3 mg/l) were highly effective in increasing the antimicrobial activity of the amphoteric peptides. Liposome-peptide complexes had a lower antimicrobial activity. They were more effective against S. aureus strains than S. epidermidis strains. Effect of dietary palatability and agonistic interactions on growth of broiler chickens (Gallus gallus domesticus). Chicken feed was either offered ad libitum (AL) or restricted to 1/2 (LP) or 1/10 (HP) the amount consumed by control birds fed AL. Treatment diets were: AL, LP, and HP. Male and female poults offered AL diet from 1 to 21 d of age. During 22 to 44 d, male birds were housed individually and female birds were housed in groups of six females and six males. At 44 d, all birds were housed in groups of six males and six females. Body weight, daily weight gain, and food intake were determined at 14, 21, 27, and 33 d. Feed efficiency was determined at 21 and 27 d. In response to a 1/10 ration, HP birds were heavier (P
