What's New in the?

Q: What was my previous question like? I just noticed that I have a chat room on Stack Overflow that I use to work with buddies on various topics. I have a few questions I would like to ask there, as I was looking around Stack Overflow for something, but wasn't able to find what I was looking for, nor was I sure if I should post it somewhere else. Those questions are linked below, and it's been about a week since they have been posted. Was I mistakingly in such a chat room? Does it matter that I wasn't notified at all, at some point of my questions being posted? If it matters, I'm using a PC and Linux (Arch). Update: The questions I was looking at were deleted ages ago. What tags should I use with JavaFX? If I want to write a group of scripts related to using audio, where should I look? Asking about an SQL injection example using the request body or the URL? A: I reviewed the first question, and found it bad enough to be deleted pretty quickly. I reviewed the second question, and I don't really know why it was put into chat since it doesn't seem that controversial. However, I suspect both of the things are well documented so I cannot say I wouldn't have posted the question on Stack Overflow since both answers seem to be pretty fine. The last question I don't really know why it was posted. If we take a look into request body example, it's not that much of an anti pattern. There isn't much on the internet apart from live test. Timken Timken is a surname. Notable people with the surname include: Benjamin Timken (1829–1877), one of the founders of the Timken Roller Bearing Company, a leading manufacturer of ball bearings.
