The gameplay takes full advantage of the PS4 game pad and with slight adjustments to the "Transition" button, it can be compared to twitch based games such as DOA, Blacklight: Retribution and if quite simply put, it's like an infinite dash type run in first person rather than third person.

The game is procedurally generated and lives on region locking from memory to memory. There's a map of the world which you must venture around, moving from point A to point B, collecting stars and killing monsters along the way.

The combination of exploration and killing enemies causes the enemies health to go down rapidly.

Like Diablo, there are many enemies, and they all have special skills that enable you to invade their mind. Although, you are more likely to be invaded by a boss enemy rather than another wandering enemy. (For example, when a relatively new enemy begins chasing me, or when a group of enemies begin chasing me).

At times, you fight a window into another region that will be able to later affect your current level. It's a mechanism that does not last long, but keeps you on your toes, and reminds you of the fact that events are inevitable so you should plan for them.

Generally, there are two types of paper feed mechanisms: a paper feed mechanism for moving a paper on which an image has been formed from the image forming portion to the transfer portion, and a paper feed mechanism for moving a paper from the tray to the image forming portion. In the first paper feed mechanism, it is necessary to provide an automatic paper feed tray for moving the paper automatically, and to provide a mechanism for feeding the paper to the automatic paper feed tray, therefore a drive source, such as a motor for moving the automatic paper feed tray and the like, is required. On the other hand, in the second paper feed mechanism, a paper feed roller is provided at an outer periphery of a sheet feed path on which the paper is loaded, and the paper is automatically fed. The paper feed mechanism is generally constructed as follows: A tray, on which the
