“FIFA Today we’re excited to share what we’ve been working on for the last few months,” commented Andrew Nowacki, senior game designer on FIFA 22. “We are excited to deliver a live-running, physics-driven football simulation for the first time in the history of the franchise. HyperMotion Technology brings hyper-realistic motion to the pitch in ways you’ve never seen before.” “Our team has been working very hard on this ground breaking technology that is also the foundation of our many innovations,” said Adam Bateman, senior producer on FIFA 22. “This technology is an enormous step forward in the quest to make a game that truly puts the player back at the center of the action.” At the heart of FIFA 22, our new motion capture system captures hyper-realistic player movement. In FIFA 22, you can see a player making motion-capture-inspired decisions as they would in real life. For example, during play your players will pass the ball back and forth, feint towards the goal, take part in one-on-one, or use their body to shield the ball from opposing players. When a player receives a ball the camera will follow the ball through their feet, then their feet and legs, and will even follow the ball through to when it crosses the goal line. Players will run, sprint, change direction, turn, and even perform a variety of jukes, dummies and shoulder charges, all within the context of the game. To capture the realism of the game, we developed and tested the technology that powers HyperMotion Motion Capture. In the game, this technology captures movement data from a live football match where we captured player movement with all 22 players, high-resolution full-body motion capture, and hand-crafted animations. Using that motion data, the technology analyzes player trajectories, intercepts, tackles, and on-ball actions. In addition to capturing data for the animations, the technology also makes real-time tweaks to the way players behave during gameplay. To do this, it uses additional data that is overlaid on the player’s model. For example, if a player is supposed to go on a sprint, then we will automatically slow down their animation. While the animation is running the software will adjust their run time and look at your on-the-fly inputs to determine how to
