##MS Word## It's been estimated that at least 40 percent of the Fortune 500 corporations in the United States use Microsoft Word. From creating letterheads, portfolios, resumes, and flyers to writing product descriptions and marketing materials, Microsoft Word is used on a daily basis. Adobe calls Word a "professional's word processing software." In that context, Word is used by writers and journalists to compose text, including business reports, technical manuals, cookbooks, and brochures.

Q: Storing constants in a separate table I'm a bit confused about how to store constants in a MySQL database. Right now I have a table called constants that contains a list of macros that the user can edit. The table also has a timestamp so that it knows when the values were last changed. For example: id = 1 macro_name = %USERNAME% macro_value = %USER_NAME% timestamp = Feb 10, 2010 12:22 PM I do not want to create a new table just to store macros in. I do not want users to be able to edit the constant directly in the database, which would allow them to update it at a future time. Right now I have the macro stored in the table, but I'm not sure how to protect it from users changing the value directly. My question is: What is the most common method for storing these kinds of constants in the database? A: This is where a better abstraction is needed to be put into place. The user should be unable to change macro constants unless he has access to a way to "patch" or add new values to a table. Another option would be to store the macro constants in XML files. If you choose to do this, keep in mind that the file content must be completely re-read on every startup. That would be a particular problem if your application is a web-based one and you need to populate the database on every request. WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Foreign Affairs Minister Stéphane Dion on Wednesday said Mexico will continue taking action against drug dealers but not against legitimate Mexican users of recreational drugs. "We are not going to legalize (drug) consumption nor are we going to legalize the consumption of recreational drugs. We will continue taking actions against drug dealers," Dion told a news conference on a visit to Washington. He said Canada has a responsibility to promote public health, but he stopped short of endorsing drug legalization, which is a favored policy of the governing Liberals in Canada. "The idea of legalizing drugs is not part of our responsibility," he said. Dion, who is in the United States for a NATO meeting and bilaterals with U.S. lawmakers, said he has long respected U.S. positions on marijuana, both medical and recreational. He also said he discussed drugs with U.S. President

The day's offerings are a bit of a mixed bag, and even a bit inconsistent. As you know, I'm less and less a fan of the "big" games, but every once in a while something great comes along, and it just feels a little bit too good to pass up. The one that I'm not at all happy about is Metro: Last Light. This is only because I generally like the Metro series, and this has not been one of their better outings. I just hope that this is a fluke, and not the beginning of the
