The long-term goal of this application is to understand how developmental timing in the eye is regulated. The importance of timely eye development is underscored by the fact that congenital defects in eye development can lead to serious, and frequently lethal, disorders in humans (e.g., anophthalmia, coloboma, microphthalmia). While progress has been made in understanding the genes and gene networks that are required for eye development, much less is known about the molecular mechanisms that control the timing of eye development. Loss of circadian function in the mouse causes embryonic eye malformations, but this phenotype appears to be secondary to the premature resorption of the eye vesicle prior to optic

Big thanks to Yigit for making this: Connect with me: Twitter: Twitch: Steamgroup: Website: Contact: There is a free contact form you can use, you can reach me at: This is a re-enactment of a British fort circa 1918 that was filmed during WW1. I made this as a little project to learn about orthographic projection and how to model in Rhino. I have a really terrible time producing anything in post-production with my camera, but I have found that it works well enough to produce a 3D model. The camera is a "Go Pro HERO5 Black". You can find a link to it a few ways: my Patreon page, where I have some fun posts and exclusive access to behind-the-scenes/commisioned materials; the Blender community forum, where I was given a link to by a fellow modeler; and finally, the Rock paper scissors game, where I'm doing a monthly challenge where I take on the winning model from the previous month! In this page, I'll demonstrate how to use our shared, local CD recording studio. It is particularly useful for recording devi8 as all pianos, harps and synths in Devi8 are built using the Fairlight ASIO synths plugin. With the free and open-source Fairlight VST Plugin / ASIO Synth Book, we can dump the sound data from any ASIO-based synth. The web page I have linked to has sample files for popular synths, such as the Roland SH-01 (which is free to download). The illustration below is for a Roland SH-01. Using The CD Audio Recorder To listen to the result, you first need to upload the final sound data file somewhere. You may also want to load that sound file on another computer to test the result. To upload your sound data file, you need to download the website. Here is a screenshot of what you will see: If you have a massive amount of sounds to be recorded, it is best to do this work piecemeal. For example, the Maxmilla's MaxMoy Folktronic, Roland SH-01, MSX-1000 and Korg Wavestation are good choices. They enable you to control each instrument straight from the PC. Normally, I would use my Arturia MicroBrute along with the dedicated MicroBrute FW0.1 USB ASIO interface to record midi to the MicroBrute, and then the MicroBrute would send the WAV file to the share computer to be recorded. However, when doing overdubs, it is common to record a group of instruments at a single time. This could be a string quartet or a jazz combo. For this project, using the audio recording software lets you combine several separate recording attempts into a single mix. The use of the SoundFont 2 (WF2) format at 96 kHz is a bonus. Hit the "Start Recording" button to start recording. On Windows 7, this button is at the top-right corner. On Windows XP, right-click on the taskbar and select "Run". When the recording is finished, the recording software will show a list of all the recorded sound. Each sound will have a standard format, but they are all concatenated together. Usually, you only need to cut off the right end. You may also want to switch to Adobe Audition, and convert the recorded WAV files to audio using tools like
