Probiotic-related products and GVHD in recipients of hematopoietic cell transplants. A number of reports indicate that probiotics can have beneficial effects in various inflammatory conditions of the intestinal tract. This study assessed the use of probiotic products as well as factors predictive of a beneficial response in 107 recipients of hematopoietic cell transplant who were followed long-term. The daily use of probiotic products was associated with the occurrence of grade II/III acute graft-vs-host disease (GVHD) (odds ratio [OR] = 7.6, 95% confidence interval [CI] = 1.47-39.1, P = .015). The occurrence of GVHD was lower in patients receiving lactobacillus than in patients receiving Saccharomyces boulardii (OR = 0.12, 95% CI = 0.01-1.12, P = .04). Lactobacillus was also associated with the prevention of grade II/III chronic GVHD (OR = 0.22, 95% CI = 0.06-0.84, P = .028). No differences in post-transplant infectious complications, mortality, or relapse rate were detected between lactobacillus- and S. boulardii-treated patients. These findings suggest that the use of probiotic products is potentially associated with a favorable clinical course in long-term survivors of hematopoietic cell transplant.
