Cerebral venous sinus and dural fistula formation is a rare complication of idiopathic thrombocytopenic purpura. Until now, only four cases of cerebral venous sinus dural fistula have been reported in the literature and none of these patients had non-specific neurological symptoms. Herein, we report the first documented case of a patient with idiopathic thrombocytopenic purpura and severe thrombocytopenia which presented with seizures and subarachnoid hemorrhage. We emphasize that this patient was at very high risk of cerebral venous sinus thrombosis (CVST) since she had not been in a recent travel or dental procedure, and was suffering from severe thrombocytopenia. Serial diffusion-weighted magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) revealed the rapid progression of cerebral venous sinus and dural fistulas. Post-operative angiography showed occlusion of venous sinus and dural fistulas. Our case highlights the significance of early MRI in the diagnosis of CVST-associated complications.Q: How to register NotifyIcon in Windows 8 Metro Style App? I am developing a small Metro Style application. There is a global variable which I want to change on a button click event in that application. I am able to register a click event handler and change the global variable in the app.xaml.cs file. Question: I want
